ASTERO CLIMBING

The Astero climbing is a large polygonal climbing unit consisting of two polyethylene body components and a metal fitting. Astero units can be differentiated by positioning multiple blocks on top of each other or side by side, furthermore, net bridges can be added as passage. It helps children socialize while having fun and play together. While the climbing experience, which gradually becomes difficult thanks to the different elevations created by the units, contributes to the development of their physical skills, it is aimed that children create and play their own games in the areas formed within the modules.
